Infamous 'Nazi Diary' Turns Out to Be Dud

• Researchers want to know how much material has been excised from philosopher's manuscript

By Michael Collins Piper

When it was announced that major portions of the long-lost diary of former high-ranking Third Reich official Alfred Rosenberg had been uncovered — missing for some 70 years — the media was abuzz, declaring the documents would shed new light on what is known as the "Holocaust."

In fact — at least from the standpoint of propping up the story of the Holocaust as it has been set down by the mass media on a non-stop daily basis — the diary is essentially a great big flop.

No major revelations have emerged, quite in contrast to the way the discovery was first trumpeted.

Media voices reported breathlessly that the diary was sure to be a treasure trove of shocking new data. This was particularly since Rosenberg — hanged following his conviction for war crimes at the post-World War II "victor's vengeance" tribunal at Nuremberg — had been minister for the eastern territories occupied by German forces where there were work camps that are now central to the stories surrounding the era.

Newspaper and broadcast audiences and the followers of Internet big mouths who always talk about "the Nazis" were led to believe the diary might be the final nail in the scaffold and prove — serious questions raised by scholars worldwide notwithstanding — that the numbers of Jews said to have been gassed, shot, electrocuted, starved and otherwise worked or terrified to death was at least the vaunted number of "6 million" and probably higher.

(Over the years the "official" number of just Jews alone reported to have been dispatched to their doom by the Third Reich has ranged from as high as 20 million to 10 or 12 million, with the figure of 6 million looming most prominently. However, in recent years, Jewish sources have tried to ramp the figure back upward, leaving trusting members of the public confused as to what the "official" figure is.)

What the major media is not reporting is that there may be a very real concern as to what may have been excised from the diary during its "missing years."

That a German-born Jew, one Robert Kempner, had his hands on the diary since most of the period following World War II — up until his death in New York in 1993 — may point toward intrigue involving the rewriting or erasing of history that those who have a stake in perpetuating the memory of "the Holocaust" would prefer be ignored.

An assistant U.S. chief counsel during the Rosenberg trial, Kempner was later a prosecutor in one of the subsequent further trials under Nuremberg's auspices and is credited as having "discovered" a document — called the Wannsee Protocol — touted as proof of a "Nazi plot" to exterminate the Jews of Europe.

In fact, there is serious debate about that document's viability and even some Jewish historians and Israeli newspaper Ha'aretz have raised questions about the stories surrounding the protocol.

So considering Kempner's role in the origins of this questionable document, the fact he made off with the Rosenberg diary — ostensibly for research purposes and with the permission of his superiors at Nuremberg — might raise questions about what material — contradicting many of the "official" stories surrounding the Holocaust — Kempner or others may have excised from Rosenberg's writings.

The truth is that while Kempner's estate was in limbo, it was discovered the Rosenberg papers had ended up in the hands of others from whom agents of U.S. Homeland Security seized them.

Thus far the most interesting thing reported from the diary is that Rosenberg noted English diplomats in Berlin for the 1936 Olympics were "angry about the negroes from the U.S.A., as they squeeze out the English during the Olympic games."

That is interesting since, over the years, the mass media has repeatedly told the lie that Adolf Hitler "snubbed" black American Olympic runner Jesse Owens, whereas Owens himself bragged of how Hitler had waved to him as he passed Hitler's reviewing stand. Later when the Hitler government published a commemoration of the Olympics, it featured a full-page picture of Owens, describing him as "the fastest man in the world."
